ONE THOUSAND YEARS OLD.

The loftiest house, and the most perfect in matter of architecture I have ever seen, was that which a woodchopper occupied with his family one winter in the forests of Santa Cruz County, California. It was the cavity of a redwood tree, two hundred and forty feet in height. Fire had eaten away the trunk at the base, until a circular room had been formed, sixteen feet in diameter. At twenty feet or more from the ground was a knot-hole, which afforded access for the smoke. With hammocks hung from pegs, and a few cooking utensils hung upon other pegs, this woodman was in possession of a house that had been a thousand years in process of building. Perhaps on the very day it was finished he came along and entered in. How did all jackknife and hand-saw architecture sink into insignificance in contrast with this house in the solitudes of the great forests! Moreover, the tenant fared like a prince. Within thirty yards of this coniferous house a mountain stream went rushing past to the sea. In the swirls and eddies under the shelving rocks, if one could not land half a dozen trout within an hour, he deserved to go hungry as a penalty for his awkwardness. Now and then a deer came out into the opening, and at no great distance, quail, rabbits and pigeons could be found. What did this man want more than Nature furnished him? He had a house with a "cupola" two hundred and forty feet high, and game at the cost of taking it. This Arcadian simplicity would have made a lasting impression, but for a volunteer remark that nothing could be added to give a more perfect zest. "Well, yes," said he, "I reckon if you are going back to town, you might tell Jim to send me up a gallon of whiskey and some plug tobacco." It will not do to invent a hollow tree with too much of sentiment and poetry. If that message had not been a delusion to this day that the lives of those people, dwelling in a house fashioned a hundred years ago, were rounded to perfect fullness, without one artificial want.—[Overland Monthly.

The Eureka Sentinel rejoices over the success of the new hydro-carbon furnace, and awaits "with some impatience and great expectations the introduction of this furnace and smelting process in Eureka."

Dr. H. H. Toland has presented the California State University with the buildings and property used by that institution, valued at $75,000.

A man bought for $350 the wreck of the ship Patrician, at the mouth of San Francisco harbor, and has cleared $10,000 in his bargain.
